

Fire and Ice by Mark

As an avid bar goer I had heard of this place from quite a few friends of mine. The most talked about feature of this bar was of course the bathrooms and the coffin smoking room. I found it strange that no one mentioned anything about the drinks or the service as if they didn't matter, everyone seemed to be mesmerised by the bars beauty!

I decided that I wanted to experience the service, the drinks and the vibe for what they were and then see what else the bar had to offer from a décor perspective. I had also assumed that the reason nobody spoke about the drinks or service was because it was terrible.

Oh and how wrong I was, the drinks were made to perfection down to the smallest detail and the service was commendable, with the friendliest of staff giving us just the correct amount of space. Not hounding the table looking for things to do but instead stealthily attentive to our needs, no where insight but the second we turned our heads, they were there.

The atmosphere of the bar was similar to those of all hotel bars. People are there for a relaxing drink and to have a quiet chat with a potential client or perhaps even an ex-girlfriend but definitely not to get the party started.

Then we get to the décor, and wow! It really is all that people say it is. With an eclectic mix of scenes and themes all with their own sense of humour or irony you will find yourself walking into the same bathroom stall two or three times trying to make sure you've seen them all. The smoking room is slightly macabre but very amusing in its own way.

All in all the Fire and Ice bar is the perfect place for that quiet drink, the service is great, the drinks are amazing, the vibe is chilled but that's good, and the décor, well yes the décor is everything you would have heard and more.
